

2020 CAPITOL CURRENTS

31st Alaska State Legislature ~ 2nd Session

Fourth Edition

2/16/2020

~ House Finance set to hear public comments on their version of the FY2021 Budget ~

HIGHLIGHTS

Plain speaking Supreme Court Chief Justice Bolger sternly reaffirmed the Judicial Branch's independence in his annual speech to the Legislature. He also said they are strong but need more money for Therapeutic Courts, faster case action, and 1% salary bump for non-judicial employees.

He pointed out that big budget cuts are hard to sustain without similar reduction in crime, divorce rate and other issues of justice.

Rep. Kopp is leading a bi-partisan charge for official state recognition of the 229 federally recognized tribes in Alaska. De facto tribal status is often acknowledged in day-to-day state business.

But, lawmakers have been reluctant to make it official. HB 221 State Recognition of Tribes would change that. Public testimony will be taken on the bill Tuesday morning at 8am in House Tribal Affairs.

Senator Shower and other disgruntled legislators want legislation and a constitutional amendment to prohibit binding legislative caucuses. They say the rule undermines minority members and can force them to vote against conscience or the will of constituents, giving too much power to the few.

The dividend fights last year, and related punishments are the primary cause. On the other hand, majority member Senator Stevens argued that the Legislature would never get anything done. Senator Revak said he loved his colleagues, but their proposal is just plain wrong.

Administration Commissioner Tshibaka is attempting to relocate the Violent Crimes Compensation Board from Juneau to Anchorage. The Executive Director since 2009, Kate Hudson, has resigned as has another staff member and a Board member declined reappointment over the relocation effort.

The Alaska Supreme Court hasn't ruled on the legality of the Recall campaign but on Friday authorized supporters to begin gathering signatures. Twenty-five percent of the previous general election, 71,252 signatures, is needed.

In a separate filing, the court agreed to hear an appeal to block the recall on a sped-up schedule. The state and Stand Tall with Mike must file their briefs by Feb. 25th. Recall Dunleavy must reply by March 9th, and oral arguments will be held on March 25th.

Senate leaders are worried about the REAL ID deadline for airplane bound rural Alaska. Getting an ID is complicated in communities without DMV offices and where elders don't speak English. Commissioner Tshibaka says there are other options and they will educate with vigor.

BUDGET ISSUES

The Administration complied with a Superior Court order and released $30 million in contested school funding. It will continue to defend against a lawsuit, now in the Supreme Court, asserting the Legislature's ability to set budgets for more than one year forward.

The Governor has proposed a revenue measure - a state lottery that may allow sports betting. Rep. Thompson proposed a version limited to draw style lotteries. Neither will fill the $1.5 billion gap but could help. Anti-gambling and industry politics may bog it down.

SB 180 would make state finances more transparent by establishing an online checkbook. Sponsor Senator Wielechowski says it will lead to greater government accountability and a public better able to assist in making difficult government decisions.

House Finance Subcommittees closed out their work on the operating budget. The full Finance Committee will talk about it this week. Public comment starts Wednesday night continuing through Saturday afternoon (see schedule below).

When public testimony concludes, Finance members will be able to propose amendments to the bill in front of them and then vote on the budget they'll send to the House floor.
